The pavement along Koshu Road from the bus stop to the Yabotenmangu-mae traffic lights is narrow so be careful when moving.

While the traffic along this road is sparse you will still need to take care because of the narrow nature of the pedestrian sidewalk.

There are no lights for the crossing at the Joyama park entrance. There is a 5m slope (10 degrees) from the road to the Joyama park entrance.

A rather gentle sloping road.

Although traffic is light, there is no pavement so be careful.

There is almost no traffic along the 4m wide roads in the residential area, but be careful because there are many bends.

Since the pathway leading up from the Shrine gate at the Yabotenmangu Shrine is a long stairway it is a good idea to use the sloping road with an incline of about 8 to 10 degrees located on your left when heading toward the gate. Some sections are quite steep. A helper would be needed in this situation.
